WASHINGTON.

CONGRESSIONAL.

[illegible]

WASHINGTON, June 3. Mr. Bland introduced a bill authorizing the issue of $50,000,000 in United States treasury notes for the improvement of the Mississippi river from St. Louis to the Gulf of Mexico. Referred.

Bills were introduced by Mr. Chittenden to restrain the secretary of the treasury from paying outstanding 5 20 bonds except in legal tender notes.

By Mr. Wright, of Pennsylvania, authorizing the issue of $45,000,000 in notes, to be known as national money.

By Mr. Ellis, levying a tax of fifteen cents per pound on tea.

On motion of Mr. Giddings a bill was passed appropriating $5,000 for continuing the improvement of Galveston harbor.

The house then proceeded to the consideration of the bill amending internal revenue laws, Mr. Carlisle, of Kentucky, in the chair.

Mr. V[illegible] offered an amendment [illegible] the removal [illegible] to federal courts of [illegible] for violation of state laws against [illegible] revenue officers. Adopted 106 to 95. No further progress was made in the bill.

The speaker announced the appointment of Mr. Lynde as visitor to West Point, instead of Mr. Blount, who is unable to attend in consequence of other duties.

The house then took a recess until evening, the [illegible] to be for the discussion of [illegible] life saving bill.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, June 3. At the conclusion of the morning business the senate took up the bill establishing post routes. Various amendments of the committee, adding new routes, were agreed to without debate. The committee reported amendments fixing the compensation [illegible] to railroad companies for transport [illegible] relating to classification of mail [illegible] Senator Ferry, [illegible] of these amendments, said those in regard to transporting mails covered substantially the propositions submitted by the committee appointed by the act of 1876 to consider the subject of mail transportation. They embraced [illegible] the single idea of changing the base of compensation from the weight of such matter to the space occupied by it, and the saving to the government by the change would be over a million dollars besides, it made the system more compatible with the present demands of the age. The other idea included in the amendment, was rapidity in transporting mails. Inducements were held out to railroad companies to deliver mails as quickly as possible. In regard to classification of mail matter, he said the amendments did not change the rate of postage, only the classification of matter, which was divided into four classes, first, written matter; second, periodical publications under registration; third, miscellaneous printed matter; fourth, merchandise. All the above amendments were agreed to without discussion.

Senator Hamlin submitted an amendment that the president and vice president of the United States, senators, representatives and delegates in congress, the secretary of the senate and clerk of the house of representatives may send and receive through the mails written or printed communications not exceeding two ounces in weight, the name of the president, vice president, senator, representative or delegate or clerk of the house to be written on the envelope.

Senator Morrill called up the house bill to authorize the secretary of the treasury to constitute superintendents of mints or assayers or assay offices assistant treasurers of the United States to receive gold coin and bullion for purposes provided by section 254 of the revised statutes. Passed.

Senator Spencer submitted an amendment to the army appropriation bill appropriating $150,000 for building a military post in the Black Hills. Referred.

Quite a lengthy discussion ensued as to the propriety of restoring the franking privilege, and finally the amendment of Senator Hamlin was rejected by a tie vote, yeas, 29; nays, 29. The committee on post offices and post roads having reported an amendment providing for semi monthly mail connection between the United States and Brazil, one line to ply between New York and Rio de Janeiro, the other line to ply between New Orleans and Rio de Janeiro, Senator Withers submitted an amendment so as to provide that the New York line should touch at Norfolk. Agreed to. Senator Maxey suggested an amendment so as to provide that the first departure of steamship of the first line shall not be later than July 1, 1878, and first departure of steamship on second line not later than Feb. 1, 1879. Agreed to. Pending discussion, the senate went into executive session, and soon adjourned.

GENERAL NEWS.

A Venezuela Quarrel.

NEW YORK, June 3. A letter from Caracas, says Jose Miguel Barcillon, the president of the house of representatives of Venezuela, was shot dead by Edwardo Scanlon, the editor of the Tribunal Liberal. A dispute arose between the men in consequence of political difference. Shortly after the dispute Barcillon met Scanlon in a street and fired at him several times without effect. Having emptied his own revolver he borrowed that of his friend Gen. Juan De Marta Gusman and fired again. Scanlon then fired two shots, both of which took effect and Barcillon died that evening.

Train Robbers Captured.

CHEYENNE, W. T., June 3. Further particulars of the capture of the train robbers is as follows: The party of eleven that went out from Rawlins in search of the train robbers, returned Saturday with the four desperadoes in charge. They overhauled them night before last about forty-five miles north of St. Mary's station. They offered but little resistance, as their only arms were revolvers, and the pursuing party was armed with long range rifles.

Only three shots were fired. They denied at first to be the robbers, but by threats and a little rope persuasion, one of them was finally induced to own up, and piloted the captors to the place where the watches and money were concealed in the rocks. This one has since turned state's evidence, and says that he and one other came from Cheyenne, and that the other two came from Kansas, in which state they committed a bank robbery a few months ago.

Anderson's Credibility.

NEW YORK, June 3. The Times, editorially noting Anderson's testimony before the Potter investigating committee, says Anderson referred in his testimony Saturday to certain conversations with Gov. Kellogg. It turns out that Kellogg was [illegible] New Orleans during the time that Anderson specifically fixes on for his dates. Anderson was appointed supervisor by the lieutenant governor, not by Kellogg, [illegible]. [illegible] refutation of the [illegible] of a man who conceded that he has lied with frequency and freedom, do not promise very well for the validity of a [illegible] which mainly rests upon his testimony.

[illegible]

CHICAGO, June 3. The much contested case of J. Sturgis against the board of trade came up before Judge R[illegible] last week in the form of an application by Sturgis for a writ of mandamus to compel the board to reinstate him, and the unusual mode of jury trial was resorted to. The jury this morning brought in a verdict [illegible] one cent damages against defendants, and unless a new trial is granted the [illegible] will issue. The verdict [illegible] the instruction that although the board [illegible] discipline or expel [illegible] it could not do so until it had complied with its own rules in cases like this, and had given the accused a chance to rebut alleged evidence of [illegible].

Bannock Indians Robbing Still [illegible]

SAN FRANCISCO, June 3. A Boise City special says the Bannock Indians last Friday robbed King Hill station on the Overland road, seventy-five miles from Boise [illegible], but the Indians captured two freight teams carrying arms, ammunition, &c. The fate of the teamsters is unknown. Col. Bernard with seventy cavalry men and twenty citizens is making forced marches to Camas prairie. Indians along the trail left in haste on the approach of the troops. It is estimated that three hundred Indians are camped in the lava beds in a position very strong, with wood, water, and grass enough to keep them all summer. A mass meeting of citizens of this city has been held to devise means to render assistance to settlers on the [illegible] route. The meeting was well attended, Chief Justice Hollister and all leading citizens [illegible] present. The conduct of Gov. Brayman was condemned in the strongest terms. Fifty men enrolled themselves to go to the relief of the settlers, but with the express understanding that they would not be subject to orders from the Governor of Idaho. The Governor telegraphed from Boise City to your correspondent saying the disreputable proceedings here to-day will be sent you.

Body-Snatching.

CINCINNATI, June 3. The search for the body of young Devin, whose grave at North Bend was robbed before that of Hon. J. Scott Harrison, and which search lead to the horrible discovery of Harrison's body, still continues. Hon. Ben. Harrison, Jno. Harrison, and Mrs. Devin, sister of the deceased, accompanied by detectives, again explored Ohio Medical college building to-day. Three bodies were found in pickle, where they were being picked for next session's use, but none were identified. After a long search all the grave clothes which had been stripped from Mr. Harrison's body with the exception of his shirt, were found secreted among the rafters of the building. Friends of Devin feel confident his body was brought to Cincinnati, and [illegible] in their efforts to secure traces of it.

Dead Heroes--U. S. Circuit Court.

LEAVENWORTH, June 3. The remains of one hundred and ninety soldiers arrived at Fort Leavenworth to-day from Ft. Harker, and were interred during the afternoon in the national cemetery with military honors. The bodies were taken from the depot in army wagons draped in flags and accompanied by one company of the Twenty-third infantry and the regimental band. The procession was a very imposing one, being very simple and unpretending.

The U. S. circuit court convened this morning with an unusually large assemblage of prominent barristers. Judge Jno. Dillon will preside.

Death Under the Wheels.

FLORENCE, MASS., June 3. Rev. C. C. Burleigh, the famous anti-slavery leader, was run over by cars to-night. His death is momentarily expected.

The Oregon Congressional Election.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 3. A Portland, Oregon, dispatch says the election passed off quietly. A large vote was polled. Returns from the city and the interior are coming in slowly, owing to the number of tickets in the field and the amount of scratching and trading. It is impossible at present to make any estimate as to the result. It is expected by to-morrow some conclusion can be arrived at.

Railroad Officers Elected.

ST. LOUIS, June 3. At a meeting of the bond and stockholders of the St. Louis, Alton and Terre Haute railroad company, held here to day, the following directors of the first class were elected: W. B. Cutting, Thomas Denny, John S. Barns, J. M. Burk, A. Gilkison. The new board organized by electing W. B. Cutting, president; Geo. W. Parker, vice president and treasurer, and E. T. Leonard, secretary.

FOREIGN.

Failures.

LIVERPOOL, June 3. The failure of Geo. H. Ireland & Co., commission brokers, is announced. Liabilities are £22,000. Deficiencies are also reported in connection with two other small firms. An impression exists that these clearances will improve the position of the market.

Wrecked.

LONDON, June 3. A dispatch from Dublin announces the arrival there at two o'clock this afternoon of 127 passengers wrecked on the steamer Idaho. They spent the remainder of the night at the railway terminus. The passengers are expected in Liverpool to-night, together with the Idaho's crew.

The [illegible] Bill [illegible]

BERLIN, June 3. The official bulletin issued from the palace at 8:30 this morning reports that the emperor passed a quiet night. Pain from his wounds has been alleviated. Physicians consider his condition satisfactory.

[illegible]

LONDON, June 3. The Times prints a dispatch, giving the first intelligible explanation of the [illegible] disaster. It [illegible] the Grosser Kurfurst and Konig Wilhelm [illegible] steaming [illegible] together. [illegible] was on the left hand or leeward side, and slightly ahead was a [illegible] steaming [illegible]. Both of the ironclads [illegible] the [illegible] chantmen. The order was then signaled to starboard helm; which the Grosser Kurfurst obeyed, [illegible] former course, while the Konig Wilhelm continued to port her helm. This brought the vessels directly in contact.

[illegible]

LONDON, June 3. In the house of commons this evening papers in regard to the congress were laid on the table. The chancellor of the exchequer stated that the documents [illegible] the invitation of Germany [illegible] to be held in Berlin on the 13th of June for free discussion of the treaty of San Stefano, and Lord Salisbury's acceptance of Germany's invitation with the explanation that England understands that all great powers are asked to [illegible] to a full discussion of the aforesaid treaty. The chancellor confirmed the announcement that Lord Beaconsfield, Salisbury and Odo Russell will represent Great Britain in the congress.

[illegible]

[illegible], June 3. An official bulletin issued from the palace this evening says the condition of the emperor is satisfactory. In reference to the report that Dr. Nobiling, the would-be assassin of the [illegible], had accomplices, the North German Gazette says when his mother visited him in prison he denied receiving anything for the deed and answered negatively when asked if the lot to [illegible] the [illegible] fell upon him.

[illegible] with the [illegible]

A correspondent at Athens telegraphs to the Times that the agreement between England and Russia causes great disappointment. The Greeks expected the annexation of Thessaly and Epyrus. In their disappointment and despair at the [illegible] for the Bulgarians they will be likely to take desperate measures. A dispatch from Bucharest says if England and Austria do not prevent the retrocession of Bessarabia the [illegible] of the Roumanians against them will be stronger than it is against Russia for taking the territory.

PERA, June 3. The agreement between England and Russia creates consternation here because it is believed to involve a [illegible] which the Turks will resist forcibly.

FOREIGN NOTES.

A Constantinople dispatch says Safvet Pasha will be one of the Turkish representatives at the Berlin congress.

Russians are not relaxing their warlike preparations south of the Balkans. On the contrary they are very active.

The Russians have offered to occupy the heights commanding Varna, and leave the town in possession of the Turks.

A new protest of the inhabitants of Lanastin warns the Russians that any advance toward Batoum will be forcibly resisted.

A dispatch from Berlin says Dr. Nobiling cannot recover from injuries he inflicted upon himself at the time of his arrest. It is said he had an accomplice in his crime.

Several special dispatches from Constantinople say the sultan failed to attend mosque whereby an outbreak is believed to be implied. This Constantinople news serves to check the otherwise firm tendency on the London stock exchange.

A dispatch from Bucharest says England promised to recognize the independence of Roumania, and declares Roumania has irrevocably resolved not to cede any territory to Russia. Great hopes are entertained of English support.

It is believed Grand Vizier Mehemet Rushdi Pasha is trying to induce the sultan to recall Midhat Pasha in order to popularize the new government, and that if the sultan refuses Mehemet will resign, leaving the odious Mahomed Damad supreme, whereby a revolution would probably be precipitated.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

The president has declined an invitation to attend the celebration at Valley Forge on the 19th, on account of the marriage of Miss Platt, which takes place the same day at the executive mansion.

Anderson testified Saturday before the Potter committee that in accordance with Senator Matthews' advice he called to see the president, who told him he had made no promises, and therefore had none to fulfill. The president then excused himself.

The Potter committee will meet again this morning. Anderson will be cross examined, and Senator Matthews will, it is said, ask to be heard before the committee, and the request of course will be granted. Subpoenas have been issued for additional witnesses, including Mrs. Jenks, of New Orleans, who, it is claimed, has the original of the Sherman letter to Anderson.

Senator Edmunds, in behalf of the judiciary committee, yesterday submitted an amendment, to be offered at the proper time, with the recommendation of that committee, as an additional section to the house bill which appropriates $20,000 for the expenses of the Potter investigation committee. The new section proposes to appropriate $20,000 to be placed to the credit of the contingent fund of the senate, to be applied towards defraying the expenses of such investigation and such inquiries as have been already or may hereafter be directed by the senate during the period of the 45th Congress. The proposed amendment was referred under the rules to the committee on appropriations, before whom the house bill is now pending.

Republican Call.

HEADQUARTERS REPUBLICAN STATE CENTRAL COMMITTEE OF COLORADO,
DENVER, May 11, 1878.

The republican state central committee of Colorado will meet at their rooms in Denver on Wednesday, JUNE 12, 1878.

It is expected that the members of the committee will be prepared to present at that time complete reports as to the condition and organization of the party in their respective counties.

An invitation is hereby extended to all members of the party throughout the state to meet with the committee for a general exchange of views. It is important that all portions of the state be represented, that their interests may be fully understood and arrangements made for the prosecution of a vigorous and successful campaign.

WM. H. PIERCE, chairman.
GEORGE T. CLARK, secretary.

A week ago Saturday four hundred Mormons sailed from Liverpool, bound for Utah.

Edward Kimball has assisted thirty-seven churches in paying debts, amounting to $1,500,000.

The New York Tribune says, "An effort is to be made to re-quicken McLin's conscience. Amount not stated."

It has been suggested to the president that General Fremont, under the present circumstances, would not be unwilling to accept the governorship of a territory.

The enthusiastic reception which President Hayes received at Gettysburg shows that the machine platform adopted by the state convention did not represent the feelings of the people.

The Boston Herald Ind. democrat says if the national democratic committee had really desired to reassure the country they should have resolved "we oppose an attack upon the president's title as dangerous to our institutions, and fruitless in its results."

The Boston school committee is contemplating a new departure in education. A committee of prominent citizens have petitioned the city to provide a building for what is called a "development school." The scholars are to be received from the grammar school, and taught some trade. The fact that the superintendents and overseers of the manufactories in New England are largely foreigners, shows that there is need of some action. Mr. Coe, one of the petitioners, says that thirty-five out of the forty superintendents and overseers, who are employed by the company with which he is connected, are foreigners. Wendell Phillipps thinks the present system of education is a hindrance to a person who is obliged to earn his own living.

The progress of Russia in civilization is seen in religious tolerance as well as in political reforms. Three evangelists were arrested three years ago for spreading heterodox views. After lying in jail three years, they were tried before a jury, which, after five minutes deliberation, acquitted them though they had clearly violated the law. These men began holding secret meetings in 1870 and had made many converts when arrested. The converts are described to be remarkable for their sobriety, honesty and clearness of principles. The only fault found with them is that they will not attend church or recognize the power of the village priest.

Miss Anna C. Brackett has written a letter to the New York Tribune explaining the reasons for the failure of Stewart's home for working women. The great reason seems to be the restraint which was placed upon the boarders. They were not allowed to have any communication with the opposite sex except under a system of espionage. They could not have sewing machines in their rooms. They were not allowed to have flowers, or pictures, or nick-nacks in their rooms. No boarder could gratify her individual taste in furnishing her room. Miss Brackett eloquently states in a word that the project failed, "because the working women of New York are real, whole-souled women, and not machines; because they are conscious of right intentions and honest work; because they like pets and flowers and children in the house which they must call home, and because they are not one-sided, perverted beings vowed to celibacy, but whole-hearted, real women, as the Creator intended they should be, who would gladly, if so it is to be, find their own happiness in, and make the happiness of, some possible future home."

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat still has Grant on the brain. It says: "The Grant fever is breaking out all over. It's a beautiful thing to have, too. No family should be without it." If Grant is nominated for a third term there will be no doubt as to the first paper to nominate him. The Globe-Democrat will possess all the glory without sharing it.

"THE NEW WEST."

We have just received a copy of "The New West," by Rev. E. P. Tenny, president of Colorado college. It is printed by the Riverside Press, and hence is all that could be desired typographically. It is also finely illustrated with views of Colorado Springs and vicinity.

The complete title of the book is "The New West, as Related to the Christian College." The title indicates the purpose for which the book was written. Colorado college is the objective point. To show the wisdom and even necessity of founding this college a large mass of facts and reasons are presented which cannot fail to make a great impression on the reader. In the first chapter of the book the author defines the "New West," and gives some very vivid ideas of its vastness and resources. The opening paragraph contains the following astonishing comparisons:

"Between the valley of the Mississippi—the Old West—and the Pacific slope lies the New West, a mountain plateau from three to six thousand feet high, upon which rise the Rocky mountains. Take Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Nevada, Idaho and Montana; then add a minute fragment of fifty thousand miles from Western Dakota, comprising the Black Hills region, and you have the New West,—one-third part of the United States,—as large as all that portion of our country east of the Mississippi. Colorado is equal in size to Switzerland, New England, New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland. Maps of Pennsylvania and New York would need to add Maryland and Rhode Island to cover Colorado. Ohio could lie down twice within the boundaries of the Centennial state, and then leave room enough for West Virginia and Connecticut. Kansas and Iowa together are not its match in square miles. Colorado has almost as many acres as Old England and New. Men team goods from Colorado Springs through Ute pass, following a longer road than that from Boston to Philadelphia, and yet they do not go out of their own state."

Then follows in quick succession fact after fact, showing the wonderful elements of wealth and greatness which this "New West" possesses. The pasture grounds of Colorado and New Mexico comprise seventy million acres, and with the rest of the "New West" will eventually be the great herding ground of the continent. To show the great agricultural resources of this country, it is said that Colorado and New Mexico have agricultural resources sufficient to maintain 10,000,000 inhabitants. The mining resources are not overlooked, nor is our wonderful climate. The present population of this "New West" is given at 700,000. After rehearsing these facts, which must impress every reader with the wonderful future which is before this country, the author asks the question, "What sort of an element will the 'New West' make in the republic of the future?" He thinks the presence of a Christian college will materially affect the answer of this question. The peculiar anti-religious influences of this country are tersely stated, and form the ground work of an eloquent appeal for the education of her intelligent, active young men, under Christian influences. The "New West" will be educated, shall that education be under Chrigian influences?

An imposing array of statistics is given to show the great moral, social and political influences which the graduates of Christian colleges have exerted during the present century. It is also shown that the Christian college has exerted a mighty influence, not only in disciplining the intellectual faculties of her graduates, but also in shaping, moulding and building up their characters.

President Tenney answers at length the question whether it is not too early to plant a college in the "New West." "Thirty-nine years after Harvard was founded, the population of New England was only thirty-nine per cent. of the population of Colorado alone." "Yale college was founded when the population of Connecticut was only twenty-one per cent. of the present population of Colorado." "Yale college was begun by the gathering of a handful of books by a few pastors who desired to perpetuate an educated ministry. Dartmouth was a charity school established in the woods. Amherst not long since had a senior class of two." These facts and many others that are given show that there is more necessity for the founding of Colorado college to-day than there was of founding Harvard in 1638. If experience has shown the action of the founders of Harvard to be wise, how confidently can the founders of Colorado college rely on the future for an approving verdict on their action.

The book has been gratuitously distributed among those persons who are wont to devise liberal things in establishing the foundations of intelligence and morality in new countries."

It cannot fail to draw attention to the great needs and opportunities of a Christian college in Colorado, and will undoubtedly elicit a liberal response. As eastern colleges appealed successfully to England for help two centuries ago, so now Colorado college confidently appeals to the east. The book will also be a great benefit to this entire country, as it will be largely distributed in the east among men of influence, and is an eloquent portrayal of the progress and future of our Centennial State. The book is for sale at the bookstores at the extremely low price of twenty-five cents in paper and fifty cents in cloth. It should be read and circulated by all interested in the prosperity of our college, city and state.

OLD AND NEW.

Are we not living in the days of fairy tales come true? Eight years ago this coming summer a few venturous, far-seeing pioneers began a town on this plain, and now what have we? To a little fair-haired girl who sits beside me this eight years is a life time. She is just dipping into written fairy lore, and this wondrous growth is no wonder to her. She has faith in the power of the fairy wand, and I have passed the shores of doubting land and believe also. But the fairy, the power of whose wand I acknowledge, is a shrill-voiced iron monster. What was Aladdin and his lamp or Cinderella's god-mother to this veritable wonder-worker, whose works do not vanish, but increase and grow? This smoky, noisy genius, this leader, penetrating unknown lands, tapping fast-locked treasure vaults, offering freely to all who follow in his train the share they are fitted to take. How I listened in amazement eight years ago, evening after evening, in the rough cabin which gave us shelter, to the plans for the building of this town, to all that "was to be." The delicious climate, the newness of the life, the marvelous beauty of sky and mountain, the great rocks, the canons where it would have been no surprise to meet giant or nymph, the sighing pines, the brooks whose weird song tempted to wander to their source, was enjoyment enough for me and I listened to the "was to be" with careless skepticism, but the wildest of these plans have been more than realized, and here to-day stands an established, prosperous, growing town, so fair to see in these lovely spring days, when the flowers are coming—the daisy, the anemone, the mountain hyacinth, the blue bell being already here—a gauze-like veil creeping over the lines of trees which adorn the streets, the grass upon the hillsides shading from winter gray to summer green, the purple light on distant mountains with the white cap of snow above, the red, white and neutral tinted rocks of the canons, the shadows on the plains, all inviting to out-door life, the hum of summer sounds, the voices of happy children at play, telling of homes in this county seat of well-named El Paso, the gateway through which our genius leads to the rich southern lands, toward the El Dorado sought of old, scaling heights hitherto unattempted except with Alpen stock, where now we sit at ease and are carried over mountain top and whirled along the edge of precipice, the genius doing all the puffing and blowing. Was the flying trunk more wonderful than this?

The surprising coloring which surrounds this gateway is fitting for the entrance to that which awaits us, when our leader shall have opened the way to the country just beyond, where the sun has so lavished his dyes on bird and flower, causing the Aztecs to originate feather painting, using the natural plumage of the birds, making pictures which outvie in color with any touch of painter's brush. How can we praise enough this good genius who opens for us this enchanting region, with all its wealth and beauty? What pleasures are in store for us when we shall explore with ease this dreamland of the old Spanish cavaliers, who with toil and weariness could only in their lifetime catch glimpses of its wonders. We hear whispers of the story of these courageous, painful wanderings. Occasional inscriptions on the works say to us, "Here they were." With a feeling akin to awe one reads these inscriptions of so long ago.

The new civilization has been gradually surrounding this old land, and now we enter in and with eager eyes look upon the wonders it unfolds. We have no need to cross seas and continents; here at our door is enough that is old, writings of which have been so scant and vague that we come almost as discoverers. Here are the Penitentes making yearly, in the lenten season, the painful stations of the cross; the fire-worshippers, the cliff dwellings, whose builders have long since passed away, leaving us these ruins of their homes from which to imagine their history. Here are hand workers in a pottery as quaint in form and design as the pottery of old Egypt. We are just at the border of this land; just looking through the entrance. These people have lived, shut in from all the world, sufficient for themselves, without need of imports, without need for what we call labor. So rich is this country that its resources, far from being developed, are hardly known. No trace of care or worry is on the faces of this people, but a look of lazy content. Their voices are soft and low—what a contrast when brought face to face with the average New Englander! How will they assimilate? Will the hard lines fade from the face of the New Englander? Will he, retaining his keen intellect, his high nervous organization, take on the courteous ease of manner of the Mexican? Will he take on his physique when pure native wine, grapes, figs and oranges shall have replaced the tea and pie of his breakfast table, warm sunshine coming through open windows shall have done away with stove's heat and confined, used-up air? Will his voice lose its sharp, nasal twang, and catch the full musical tones of the voices of those he comes to dwell among? Will the old Spanish salutation to guests, (even though it may be only words,) "my friend, all that I have is at your disposal," ever come with ease from New England lips? Will it not when life ceases to be a hard fight and a generous hospitality becomes an honest possibility? On the spot where now stands the cross of the Penitentes will be built the public school; the spelling-book and arithmetic will take the place of the scourge; bodies will no longer be lacerated but brains will feel the wholesome lash of competition. For after the land is once touched by the wand of our genius it never returns to its former condition; but, yielding to the power of the great magician, becomes itself a power to help the moulding of the world in its progressive course.

Just on the border of this old land, toward which we are being led, is springing up, as if by magic, another town, 7,500 feet above sea level, on the banks of the Rio Grande, called Alamosa, from Alamo, the cottonwood tree. On March 28 there were twenty-eight buildings in this town; and on the third of April, fifty-five; and so it grows. So central is the position of this town, so grandly picturesque its surroundings, so rich agriculturally and minerally its neighborhood, that its prosperity and rapid growth is not to be questioned. It will naturally be the base of supplies for an immense area; will be the most likely county-seat of Conejos county. Lots are rapidly selling for cash at good prices, and when the locomotive shall whistle in the passengers on the train will be able to take their choice of good hotels. What a spot it will be from which to make camping and shooting expeditions off into New Mexico, and the neighboring mountains and parks. For fishing the river is well stocked with trout and eel, and just below the town is a lake of no diminutive proportions. Boats are building for pleasure excursions on lake and river. We who have witnessed the growth of Colorado Springs are not to be surprised by what this Alamosa will do. We know it will grow and grow rapidly. It is almost an incorporate town. Pray stop a moment, new-born sister. Let us get our spring suits ready before you invite us to the inauguration of your mayor, paint the names upon your street corners, and the numbers upon your houses, that one may not lose their way after a few days' absence. Good governor, have a steady hand with the enthusiastic, thriving people gathering around you. Don't let them buy up all the lots before the first train of cars arrives; give those coming on this train a chance, or as things are going now you will shortly have to build a newer town.

A Triumph

Little Roger up the long slope-rushing
Through the rustling corn,
Showers of dew drops from the broad leaves brushing
In the early morn,

At his sturdy little shoulder bearing
For a banner gay,
Stem of fir with one long shaving flaring
In the wind away!

Up he goes, the summer sunshine flushing
O'er him in his race,
Sweeter dawn of rosy childhood blushing
On his radiant face

If he can but set his standard glorious
On the hill top low,
Ere the sun climbs the clear sky victorious,
All the world aglow!

So he presses on with childish ardor,
Almost at the top!
Hasten, Roger! Does the way grow harder?
Wherefore do you stop?

From below the cornstalks tall and slender
Comes a plaintive cry —
Turns he for an instant from the splendor
Of the crimson sky

Wavers, then goes flying toward the hollow,
Calling loud and clear:
"Coming, Jenny! Oh, why did you follow?
Don't you cry, my dear!"

Small Janet sits weeping 'mid the daisies,
"Little sister sweet,
Must you follow Roger?" Then he raises
Baby on her feet

Guides her tiny steps with kindness tender,
Cheerfully and gay,
All his courage and his strength would lend her
Up the uneven way

Till they front the blazing east together,
But the sun has rolled
Up the sky in the still summer weather,
Flooding them with gold.

All forgotten is the boy's ambition,
Low the standard lies,
Still they stand and gaze — a sweeter vision
Ne'er met mortal eyes

[illegible] was splendid, Roger, that was glorious,
Thus to help the weak,
Better than to plant your flag victorious
On earth's highest peak!

Cecilia Thaxter in St Nicholas.

Regarding the evacuation of the fortresses, General Todleben has held towards the Turks language to which they are unaccustomed. It was short, and in tone rather sharp, and the manner of the general was rigid and he did not smile much He seemed to have a disagreeably definite conception of what he wanted, and he wanted it immediately. Worst of all, he seemed not only to want it, but to be very much bent upon getting it. So ministers went backwards and forwards and the sultan, bowered in lilac and apple blossom and clustering creeds, sat [illegible] at ease in the pavilion of [illegible]. The Russian general could only see the [illegible] side of the question, and that in a hard and unpleasantly practical manner, resisting with ruthless [illegible] Safvet's trained skill in staving off questions that are inopportune What a contrast to General Ignatieff! He planned, and [illegible] the destruction of the Ottoman empire, but he went about it cheerily and chattily, never jarring the nerves of an Ottoman statesman by severity of manner, nor vexing his spirit by a smileless face Even the grand duke was courtly in his way, supple and elastic in bearing and behavior. But Todleben was as rigid as granite as rough as a file and as solemn as doom. Todleben wanted the fortresses of Batoum, Varna and Shumla, and he did not take seriously the porte's statement that the means of transport were wanting, but pushed the question home as to when the means would be available, and asked for a categorical reply to the question, "When can I have the fortresses?" Correspondence London Times.

Professor Henry was almost without a vice, at least he was entirely free from one as far as mortal eye could see He was utterly indifferent to worldly pleasures, though he liked a good dinner, yet if the least little matter was on his mind the spread before him might be delightful to the most capricious epicure, still it would receive no attention from the professor He seldom ever tasted liquor, only when he received guests at his own house, and he never used tobacco in any form. His favorite method of labor was to rise at daybreak, and throwing a dressing gown or wrapper around his shoulders he would pass from the bed room to his study or his office, as the case might be, and write, read and make notes as he read until the family called him to an eight oclock breakfast. Then he would show himself and the loving hand of his wife or daughter would adjust his collar and cravat for the day. At 9 o'clock he would be back in his office and direct the operations of the institution as they progressed, remaining there usually until between 4 and 5 o clock in the afternoon and after all the employes had taken their departure. This is the routine in which Professor Henry has worked here for the last thirty years, interrupted only by his annual summer trip during August and September along the coast on lighthouse board duty or brief intervals of experimenting on physical phenomena at irregular intervals in the building During the last sixteen years, in which your correspondent has known him in the most intimate and confidential relation, Professor Henry never used a harsh or an unkind word to a person dead or living — Washington Correspondence Cleveland Herald.

Mr. Sumner came into my room late one evening, when he was last in Paris, with a story of his experience in the Cafe Riche His dinner had been bad from beginning to end, and his bill was startling. He paid it, as he paid everything without a murmur, for nobody ever behaved more thoroughly en prince in such matters than Mr. Sumner. Then he sent for the maitre d'hotel. That great personage came, and was possibly surprised to hear that his presence had been desired that Mr. Sumner might tell him, in his excellent and very emphatic French, that every dish served him had been detestable; and that, while he had paid the account, he perfectly understood that he had been shamefully overcharged This Mr Sumner did in the general interest, and if everybody would do as much, the public would by and by find its account in it. Smalley's Letters from Paris.

The Master of Rugby.

While directing many a powerful blow against the principles of the Oxford school, Arnold always spoke of the individual writers of that school not only with perfect kindness but even with sympathy and respect Yet all his principles made him the severe opponent of every practice and theory which tended to draw ineradicable lines between the clergy and the laity. Want of intellectual manliness is the very last charge which any one could ever have brought against Thomas Arnold There was nothing exotic about his sentiments, nothing conventional about his language. He was a model for all clergymen in this respect more than all others, that like Canon Kingsley he was every inch a man And he had the faith of a man in all its vigor the faith which would have scorned any mere respectful complaisance at the hands of an opponent, the faith which desired the pure air of heaven and the clear light of day If there was one thing which he detested more than another it was an insincere argument He saw no sanctity in pretentious incompetence; Ignorance never appeared to him any the more venerable because it uttered its dicta as from an oracle. He earnestly labored to destroy that unchristian superstition which, as a necessary consequence of straining at the gnat, forever swallows the camel Clearly perceiving that the business of a theologian consists in the two-fold work of interpreting the Scriptures and of applying them of which the first requires a study of criticism and philology, and the second a knowledge of our own and former times, together with the general constitution of the human mind and character he had but little respect for a large proportion of what is called Divinity, and openly stated his opinion that the writings of unqualified divines were in theology particularly worthless Arnold here hit upon a temptation to which some religious teachers are particularly liable Accustomed to teach authoritatively, and to have their utterances accepted as authoritative by the majority of those immediately around them, they have been too apt in all ages to assume for themselves a monopoly of orthodoxy, and to attach a most extravagant importance to the assertion of their individual opinions, and that, too, on subjects with which they do not even possess an elementary acquaintance We who are clergymen should not resent the warning that the intensity of our prejudices is no true measure of the value of our convictions, and that no spectacle is more saddening than that of

"Blind Authority beating with his staff
The child that might have led him," or that of Ignorance taking itself for Infallibility, and anathematizing what it does not understand. Against such dangers increased a thousand-fold in those who breathe that intoxicating incense of support and flattery which is weekly burned for the adherents by our party religious new[spapers] the writings of Arnold will [illegible] [illegible]

The latest rumor [illegible] is of the betrothal of the president's niece, Miss Emily Platt, and General Hastings, of Ohio, who was lieutenant-colonel of Hayes' regiment during the war. He is a fine man, and one to whom the president and his wife can feel no hesitation in confiding the niece who has been to them like a daughter. The president says of him, that he is the most reckless brave man he ever saw, and that had it not been for his recklessness of danger, he would not have received the wound in the knee which has caused him to be somewhat lame ever since the fight into which he plunged with such dauntless courage. He is a tall, soldierly-looking man, apparently a little over forty years old. He wears a full, brown beard, covering his somewhat long face. He has made frequent visits to the white house since the Hayes family have been there. He was one of the guests at the "silver wedding" and at the New Year's reception. He is now visiting the president. Miss Platt who returned from New York a few days ago, is the only lady at the white house, Mrs. Hayes being absent on her fishing excursion with the vice president and party. She is not expected until the end of next week I have mentioned the engagement of Miss Platt and General Hastings as a rumor, for it has not yet been officially announced, though more than one of our local papers have published it as a fact, and asserted that the wedding will take place at the White House next month Miss Platt, during the time she has spent in Washington, now more than a year, has greatly endeared herself to all who have met her. She is the daughter of the President's only sister, between whom and himself a peculiarly strong affection existed She was educated in Europe, and has traveled much in foreign lands. Since her own mother's death and her father's second marriage, she has passed most of her time with her uncle and has been Mrs. Hayes' able assistant in her public duties in the Governor's Mansion in Ohio, and in the White House here. She is a girl of superior character, as well as many personal attractions. She has soft, fair skin, dark hair and gray eyes, and wears a very pleasing expression. She is second only to Mrs. Hayes herself in tact and adaptability, yet is noticeably modest, and lacking in self-assertion. She easily finds pleasant topics for conversation with the greatest stranger, and is singularly ready in pretty, lively, yet never caustic repartees. She is perhaps twenty-three years of age, and may be younger. Her only sister, who is her senior, is the wife of General Mitchell. Miss Platt has been Mrs Hayes' executive officer, attending to many of the social obligations for her, answering notes (Miss Platt writes very pretty notes), registering cards, and relieving her aunt of much care and annoyance in divers ways. Washington Letter.

Toward the end of the last reign in Russia, a native official of high rank, having questioned their reputed skill in tracking down any one on whose trail they might be set, was challenged by the minister of police to test it in his own person. Accordingly the Russian left the capital, and returning to it a month later with the utmost secrecy, in a seemingly impenetrable disguise, took up his quarters at an obscure tavern in the poorest part of the city, but he had hardly been there an hour when he was astonished by the arrival of a courier with a card from the minister inviting him to dinner that evening.

The ticket sales at this station last month amounted to nearly $6,000.

Officer Clark went out yesterday after some horse-thieves, of whom he had track.

Two new engines for the D. & R. G. railway arrived in Denver on Sunday. Also one for the D. & S. P. R. R.

There is now at the freight depot at this city over 200,000 pounds of freight awaiting transportation into the mountains.

Marshal Dana reports one drunk for Sunday last, name, Ed. Rollins. Justice Smith fined him two dollars, in default of which he languishes.

A train of eleven wagons, forty persons, and thirty-five head of stock passed through our city yesterday, en route from Kansas to Washington Territory.

The pleasant weather of day before yesterday caused a large attendance at the various churches throughout the city. The Sunday schools were [illegible].

One of [illegible] birth to a lamb with two heads. One head, which was fully developed, was cut away.

We are informed that while Judge Price was standing in the postoffice on Sunday last, waiting for the distribution of the afternoon mail, he was attacked by John Potter's dog, which bit him severely on the leg. It is hoped that the dog was not rabid. [illegible] allowed to run at large without being muzzled.

Alderman Woodgate [illegible] for us on Saturday night. In passing through the park on his way home, about ten o'clock, he was approached by a man, who evidently meant plunder, but not caring for an encounter, Mr. W. called to the officers, who were on the lookout, which caused a [illegible]. A search [illegible].

The latest reliable statistics credit the Methodist churches of the world with having over 4,500,000 of actual members, over 3,500,000 of which belong to the American Methodist church. This is astonishing, when we remember that 100 years ago American Methodism scarcely had an existence. One branch of the American Methodism now has over 1,608,000 members, and over 100,000 are not credited with membership on account of holding church letters. One and a half million of Sunday school scholars, and $90,000,000 worth of property, with sittings for 8,000,000 of worshipers.

[illegible]

We would call the attention of our readers to the advertisement on our third page, of Messrs. Marsh & Brent's burro passenger train. These gentlemen have recently returned from New Mexico with twenty-four burros, any one of which is capable of packing two hundred pounds to the top of any mountain in the range. They are fully equipped for either long or short excursions, having tents, bedding, cooking utensils, etc., and will take along a first-class cook, so that parties need take nothing outside of a comb and tooth-brush, unless it may be a nightcap. Their charges are extremely low in comparison with rates which have heretofore been charged, and we [illegible] business than they can well attend to.

Mr. Coe, the [illegible].

Mr. Coe, who has been so long and favorably known in connection with that of Rev. E. P. Hammond, is in the city. Last Sabbath morning he made his presence known at the Methodist Episcopal Sunday School. The Superintendent, having known him, cut short the lesson some ten minutes to give him an opportunity to speak to the children. But ten minutes for such a man, with the accumulated experience of forty years, was too short, and it was concluded to have a Union Sunday School at the Presbyterian church, so that all could have an opportunity to hear him.

Promptly at 4 o'clock Mr. Coe ascended the platform and addressed a well filled house. Mr. Coe interested the audience with a short history of his varied experience, and then, with appropriate illustrations, plainly showed how much easier it was to become a Christian in youth than in old age. The speaking was interspersed with the best of singing, and was much enjoyed by all. It is hoped that Mr. Coe will remain longer and afford us many opportunities of hearing him.

J. P. McMillen, of the Howard house, has recently purchased the Central Hotel, which he has thoroughly renovated and repaired, and will open it as a first-class hotel within a few days.

Certificates of incorporation of "The Arkansas, San Juan and Pacific Railway Company," and the "San Juan and Pacific Railway Company," were filed at the county clerk's office yesterday.

Business [illegible] increase in our [illegible]. L. H. [illegible] reports his cash sales of Saturday last as being in excess of those of any day since he began business. Also the sales for the month of May ran ahead of any previous [illegible].

An excursion to the Grand Canon of the Arkansas, has been arranged for by the M. E. society of this place, to take place on or about the 18th of this month. Arrangements have been made by which comfortable conveyances will meet the party at the depot in Canon City to transport them to the canon and back again, allowing two hours there, thus enabling the trip to be made in one day. Full particulars will be published in due season.

Military [illegible].

In accordance with the law governing state troops, Co. B, Colorado Springs cavalry, will be inspected by Captain T. H. Burnham at Prowseonian Military Hall this evening at 7:30 o'clock. Members of the company who are not present will be fined $2 each.

The company has received an invitation to visit Pueblo on the 3d of August next, [illegible] of the [illegible] tournament, and to take part in the exercises of the day.

Arrangements for the "encampment" of [illegible].

Funeral of J. C. Christian.

The funeral services of Mr. J. C. Christian were held on Sunday afternoon. Arrangements had been made to take the remains east on the morning train, but a telegram was received Sunday morning which changed the arrangements so that [illegible] took place [illegible] Mount Washington. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon the [illegible] carriages from the Crawford [illegible] and followed the remains to the cemetery, where the beautiful burial service of the Episcopal Church was read by Rev. [illegible] brief but [illegible] remarks in relation to the deceased. Mr. Christian had been for years a member of the Masonic fraternity, and at the request of his daughter, the following named gentlemen, [illegible]:—Dr. W. M. Strickler, A. Sagendorf, J. Culver, I. Morley, E. J. Eaton and Rufus Choate. After the grave had been filled, many beautiful wild flowers were strewed over it by friends of the deceased, and a handsome wreath of white flowers which had lain upon the coffin was placed at the head of the grave. Thus ends one of the saddest chapters in the history of our city, and although Mr. Christian was known but few in our city, [illegible] cted family rest assured of the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community.

Miss Julia Christian, daughter of the deceased, left the city yesterday morning for her home in St. Louis. During her short residence in our city she has won the highest regard of a large number of friends, who will, one and all, deeply regret the sad circumstances which caused her departure.

[illegible] Pompeii.

The lecture, on the above subject, to be delivered at [illegible] Hall this evening, [illegible].

The Rev. Mr. Salter interested and instructed a fairly sized and intelligent audience at the First Congregational church last evening in the delivery of his lecture on Pompeii. It was a description in a simple, plain and interesting manner of Naples, Pompeii and the volcano of Vesuvius, by one who had visited them, and who told only what he saw and how he was impressed. Paintings and photographs were exhibited, illustrating the uncovered ruins of the ancient city, its shops, [illegible], and the city and bay of Naples. In this way many of the [illegible] were obtained far more vivid impressions of the scenes described than any mere word picture could possibly have conveyed.

There is something intensely interesting in all the minutiae of the life and habits of those people who lived eighteen hundred years ago, as exhibited in the uncovered ruins of Pompeii. As he said, it is exactly as if the city of St. Louis should be deserted to-day, and some miraculous power should preserve its houses [illegible] contained for a thousand years [illegible] decay, for the inspection of the curious searchers of that future time. Many a chapter of history and story of the Bible is rendered far more intelligible by Pompeii than the [illegible] before. All the habits and [illegible] the people, even to what they ate upon this [illegible] and purchased in the stores, are to be seen as plainly [illegible] of [illegible] to-day; and [illegible] and [illegible] with which Mr. Salter [illegible] vivid like color to [illegible] written letter or book can have.

There is some talk of a repetition of the lecture at an early day. It is hoped that it may be [illegible] instructive treat it has [illegible] ver.

Tickets for the lecture may be obtained at Duncan's bookstore.

William Blackmore.

All friends of the late William Blackmore will read with interest the following quotation from a London letter in the Boston Advertiser. To those who did not have the pleasure of his acquaintance, we will say that Mr. Blackmore had always manifested a great interest in this country, and contributed several hundred very valuable books to our county library:

"A few lines in last week's Athenæum recorded the fact of the death of Mr. William Blackmore. He was a solicitor by profession and an archæologist of note. Comparatively few persons, however, who are unversed in archæological questions, know anything about him, yet he did enough to merit the attention of a still larger circle. I met him at dinner a few years ago at the house of a [illegible] of the [illegible] departments of the British Museum, and I was struck with the intimate acquaintance which he displayed with the western states and territories of the Union. He knew everything about their history, geology and natural characteristics. Though I never saw him again, yet the announcement of his death had the effect of making me regret his loss, because he was a man so full of information that it was sufficient to have conversed with him once to excite a desire to renew the pleasure. While such a desire cannot again be gratified I have been able within the present week to visit a museum which is a monument of Mr. Blackmore's industry and liberality. This museum is specially noteworthy on account of containing a splendid and almost unrivaled collection of North American antiquities. In a report to the American Antiquarian Society the Hon. J. R. Bartlett, of Rhode Island calls it the finest of its kind and says: 'It is doubtful whether one of equal extent and so rich in the works of primitive men in America can again be made.' The museum is in the old cathedral city of Salisbury and Mr. Bartlett adds that 'the city of Salisbury can now boast of possessing, in the Blackmore museum, the finest collection of stone implements and other objects of our aborigines in the world.'"
